Should New Zealand exporters take a multi-distributor approach in China?

New Zealand exporters at market-entry stage can adopt an exclusive distributor or take a multi-distributor approach in China. There are pros and cons for each, and both can succeed or fail.

How does a Chinese partner work with a New Zealand exporter?

The New Zealand exporter and the Chinese partner collaborate more closely to distribute products or services in the market. Partners may create a new entity registered in either New Zealand, Hong Kong, or China (each option has pros and cons).

How can a New Zealand business get a product to China?

In a market like China, where product distribution is complex and multifaceted, the most common market-entry method for New Zealand businesses is to use an experienced third-party distributor. Regardless of whether a product is for industrial or consumer use, getting a product to China is a massive task for any New Zealand exporter on their own.
